

Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law has been extremely effective in lowering the number of calls I receive during the course of an evening. This is particularly beneficial considering that, at one point, I received between 15 and 25 calls per evening. It was disruptive to family time, especially at mealtime. I've had several situations in which individuals have asked for credit card or check numbers over the phone on products I never heard from or wanted to purchase. I have been sworn at, re-called and badgered. Thanks to Indiana's law, I get about three calls per week--all from charitable causes that I have no objection to helping out. I urge you not to dilute Indiana's law--it works well and has a great deal of public support.
